“Cell phones should absolutely be banned from school, no questions asked. My philosophy is that we lived a hundred years without them and we can live another hundred years without them if we choose to do so. They are nothing but a disruption to class instruction.”

-ERICH OSTROWSKI Fourth-grade teacher, Tucson, Arizona (NEA Today)

Great Public Schools for Every Child

“Well, our students have now figured out that they can cheat on quizzes and tests by “texting” each other. Not only are phones distracting, but now they are a cheating tool.”

-KENNETH F. MEER Naval science instructor, Easton, Maryland (NEA Today)

Great Public Schools for Every Child

“A 2006 study by market research firm, the Yankee Group, found that if trends continue, more than 50 percent of the “tween” population (8-12 year olds) will be using cell phones by 2010”

-Hunter, 2007

Twenty-five schools in New Hampshire are encouraging their students who own web-enabled cell phones to use them to access homework, class assignments, and other content.

“It allows cell phones to be viewed more as educational tools than simply for recreational use,” said Nick Rago, director of HomeWorkNow.com

FUTURE OF CELL PHONES

Apple to Add Micro Projectors to iPhone and iPod Touch?

Monday July 06, 2009 10:11 AM EST; Category: iPhone
Written by Eric Slivka

In a brief note, DigiTimes reports that Taiwanese firm Foxlink is currently developing micro projectors for use in mobile phones, with Apple being one of the companies expected to launch devices with built-in projectors later this year. The projectors would allow the iPhone and possibly the iPod touch to directly project video output onto an external surface.

International brand vendors, including Nokia, Samsung Electronics and Apple, reportedly all plan to launch handsets with built-in micro projectors by the end of this year, indicated the sources, adding that Foxlink is likely to benefit from the emerging trend due to its strong business relationships with Nokia and Apple.

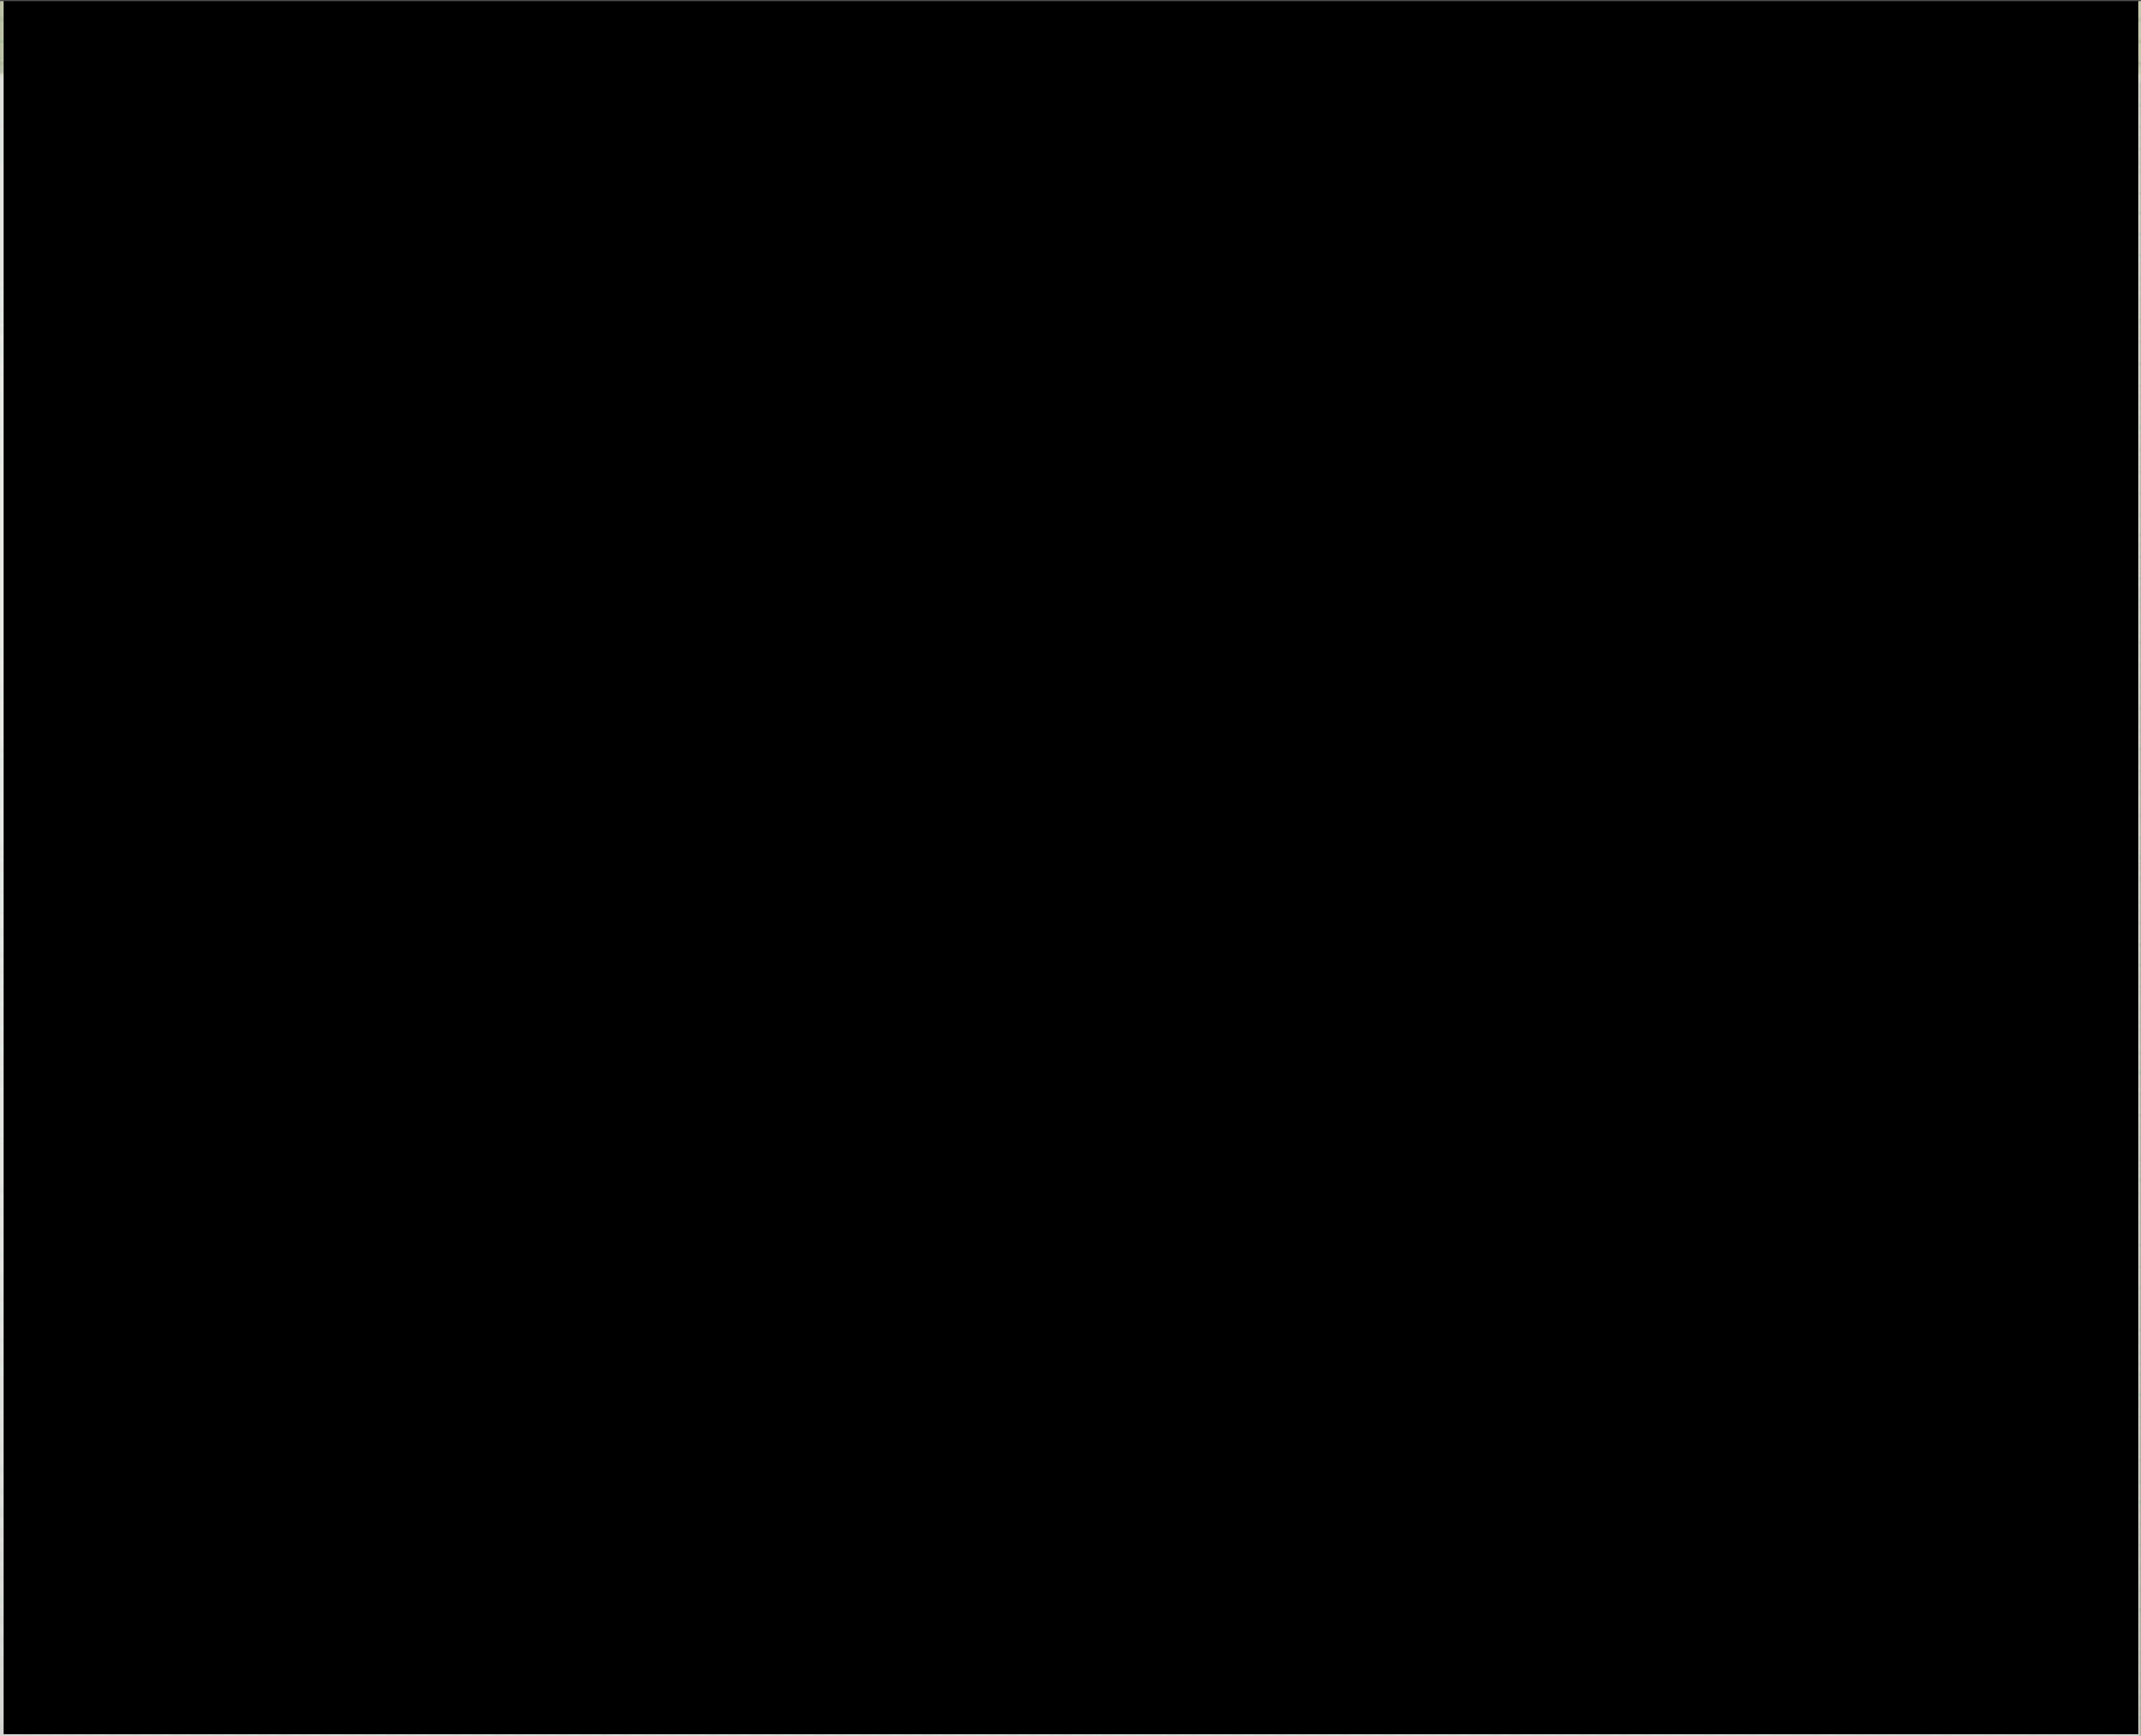

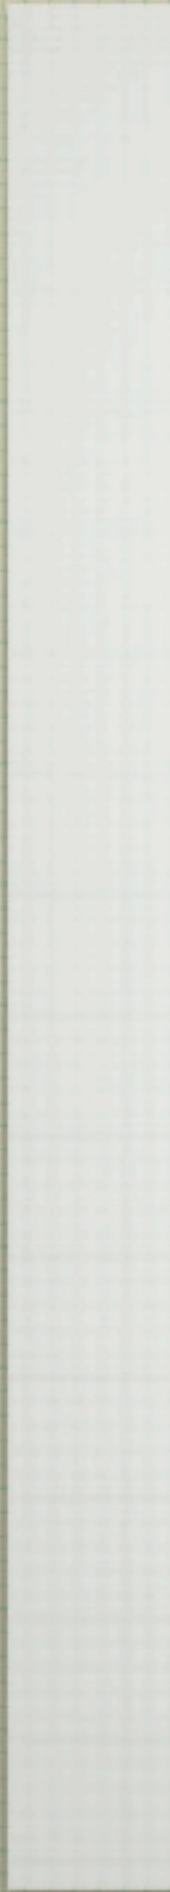

Foxlink has long been a supplier for the iPhone and iPod, providing the proprietary connectors used in many of Apple's devices.

Micro projectors are just making their way into phones, although the resulting products are relatively bulky by mobile phone standards. Introduction of a new iPhone containing a micro projector by the end of this year would also be a significant deviation from Apple's usual product cycle that has seen the company release new iPhone models on a yearly basis each June or July.
